researchers have neglected the cultural history of education and as a result women's educational works have been disparaged as narrowly didactic and redundant to the history of ideas. Mary Hilton's book serves as a corrective to these biases by culturally contextualising the popular educational writings of leading women moralists and activists including Sarah Fielding, Hester Mulso Chapone, Catherine Macaulay, Mary Wollstonecraft, Hannah More, Sarah Trimmer, Catharine Cappe, Priscilla Wakefield, Maria Edgeworth, Jane Marcet, Elizabeth Hamilton, Mary Carpenter and Bertha von Marenholtz Bulow over a hundred year period from the rise of print culture in the mid eighteenth century to the advent of the kindergarten movement in Britain in the mid nineteenth. A variety of women intellectuals from strikingly different ideological and theological milieux supported, embellished, critiqued and challenged contemporary public doctrines by positioning themselves as educators of the nation's young citizens. Of particular interest are their varying constructions of childhood expressed in a wide variety of published texts including tales, treatises, explanatory handbooks and collections of letters by explicitly and consistently connecting the worlds of the schoolroom, the family and the local parish to wider social, religious, scientific and political issues. These women's educational texts were far more influential in the public realm than has been previously represented. Written deliberately to change the public mind, these texts spurred their many readers to action and reform.

Further, these women work in educational institutions that have higher status and prestige than their sisters in elementary, middle or high schools. Second, female professors are bearded mothers. Women who have engaged in science education value rationality and logic and assume authority as participants in academe. The use of logic, the acceptance of authority and the assumption of power are masculine gender stereotyped characteristics. This situation places women in a paradox because others, including peers and students, expect them to display stereotypic female gender dispositions such as mothering, nurturing, sacrificing their needs for others and a commitment to the institution.

The first collection of essays to explore the diversity of female identity as it is expressed in the literature of 29 world writers from 15 different countries.

contributed by ten distinguished scholars the essays in this volume address medieval constructions in gender and identity sharing an interest in women and identity formation these essays range through time covering the period from the tenth through the fifteenth century and across languages discussing sources in latin italian french occitan english and hebrew they range also through a variety of cultural settings from nunneries in germany italy france and england to a jewish community in france from the provence of the troubadours and the england of chaucer to the florentine scribal circles in which dante s vita nuova was copied joan m ferrante s pioneering contribution to the history of women and their representation is a connecting thread through this volume of essays commissioned in her honor
