when around 1500 the muslim weaver kabīr sang his songs in banaras nobody could imagine that at the end of the twentieth century he would be most frequently quoted bhakti saint in north india five hundred years after kabīr was born in banaras and after at least 80 years of scholarship do we have any certainty that the songs attributed to him and published in critical and uncritical editions and translations are by kabīr i doubt it more and more between kabīr and our computer age lie 150 years of oral transmission which never stopped and nearly 400 years of scribal transmission we have no oral recordings of kabīr scolding his audiences and i take it for granted that he did not write down his compositions what we have are manuscripts in which his popular repertoire was written down first by travelling singers and later in a more respectful and professional way by devoted scribes but what do we have of kabīr in those repertoires i argue that with certainty we can only say that the version of kabīr s songs found in the seventeenth century manuscripts is the version commonly used and sung by singers then among the pad s in the vā nī of kabīr we can earmark those that may have been popular in the repertoires around 1550 that is two generations after the death of kabīr and one generation before the first manuscripts still preserved now were written the norm is occurrence in punjab and or rajasthan when everything is said and done one question remains how could kabīr become so charismatic that many devotees possibly during his lifetime and definitely after his death were happy to insert his name as bha nitā in their own compositions and let those songs circulate with his name not their own what was his genius that eventually was changed into a social consciousness strongly influencing later generations
