originally published in 1908 this book aims at setting forth liberty personal and national not as a mere utility as is usually the case but as an a priori moral necessity the sine qua non of all true civilisation

there are two points from which humanity may be viewed the bodily and the mental hitherto and for various reasons medicine has concerned itself almost solely with the physical side of man the result has been disappointing for necessary as it is to be acquainted with the bodily structure in health and in disease the changes that occur in the latter only represent the physical results of a process and not the means by which the damage is done now the duty of the physician is like that of the pilot to bring his patient safely into port availing himself of every agency with that one object in view therefore mind in the fullest and widest sense must be one of his chief studies folklore as an historical science by george laurence gomme is a scientific publication written in the early 20th century the work examines the intricate relationship between history and folklore arguing that folklore can provide significant historical insight into the psychological social and cultural evolution of humanity through various examples and analyses the author plans to reveal how folklore serves as a valuable resource for understanding historical events and societal structures the opening of the text lays the groundwork for the exploration of folklore as a legitimate historical source addressing the prevailing skepticism surrounding its value among historians gomme highlights the gaps within traditional historical narratives and emphasizes that folklore can fill these voids by preserving details about everyday life community customs and significant events that formal history often overlooks he suggests that by integrating folklore into historical studies researchers can gain a more comprehensive understanding of past societies illustrating this with the rich tradition surrounding the pedlar of swaffham as a case study this serves as a prime example of how local legends encapsulate broader historical truths bridging the divide between folklore and recorded history this is an automatically generated summary in the first three chapters of this book the elements of persuasion as a mental process are distinguished and various forms of false persuasion in individuals and groups are described it is shown how from the very nature of the process involved our persuasion of ourselves is only too apt to degenerate into self deception and how our persuasion of others may easily assume the form of a deliberate attempt to exploit their mental or moral weaknesses chapter iv indicates how the tendencies of false persuasion may be counteracted and on what lines persuasion may be rightly directed up to this point the subject is treated mainly in its psychological aspect the subsequent chapters which are closely related to and follow naturally the study of persuasion as a mental process deal with persuasion more exclusively as a form of expression in this part of the book special attention is given to such modern forms of propaganda as advertisements newspapers the cinematograph the novel and the drama
