this book discusses how metaphors in the short story collection they say i'm a monkey are translated into english a metaphor is a figure of speech that compares two things indirectly and is often used in literature to deepen meaning or create a strong impression because of this translating metaphors is not an easy task it involves many considerations including cultural background word choice and the original author's intent the author examines the english translation of the stories to see whether the meaning and nuance of the original metaphors are effectively conveyed in the target language the book also explores various types of metaphors such as everyday metaphors cultural metaphors and uniquely crafted metaphors as well as how translators deal with differences in culture and language to keep the meaning intact in addition the book touches on other challenges in translation such as rendering strong or vulgar language interjections like eh uh loh the tone or rhythm of sentences and the metaphorical nature of story titles overall this book shows that translating literary works especially those rich in metaphor is more than just replacing words from one language to another it requires a deep understanding of the underlying meaning and the cultural context of the original text an extensive overview of female film directors worldwide showing how they are breaking through the celluloid ceiling and succeeding in a still very male dominated industry the book contains exclusive interviews with women film directors explores the impact of digital technology and reaches some surprising conclusions now that kathryn bigelow has made history as the first woman to win an oscar for directing we ask whether this is a new era for women filmmakers this unique international overview highlights emerging women directors and groundbreaking pioneers and provides a one stop guide to the leading film directors of the 21st century and the people who inspired them from the blockbusters of the hollywood studios to emerging voices from saudi arabia pakistan and laos we learn of women making films in traditionally male dominated areas such as action fantasy and horror there are contributions from countries with film industries in every state from nascent to mature and this book demonstrates how economic and technological change is creating new opportunities for women film directors everywhere best book on women directors due to its global overview diane amazon gabrielle kelly and cheryl robson have crafted a watershed work celluloid ceiling is essential reading for anyone who wants to know how women directors are helping reshape filmmaking d a morris amazon this book is an essential resource for anyone tracking the inspiring work being done by women film directors from around the world ucf film the level of public consciousness about the barriers faced by female filmmakers is higher than it has ever been despite this the discussion more often than not centres around north america and to a lesser extent europe australia and new zealand and i am guilty as charged this is perfectly understandable but clearly women do make films outside of these countries and it can be illuminating to consider how their experiences reflect or differ from those with which we are more familiar to this end the arrival of a new book the celluloid ceiling could not be more timely edited by gabrielle kelly and cheryl robson it takes a purposefully global overview of the status quo and in doing so provides some fascinating stories and insights reminding us of what is lost when we limit the discussion to anglophone directors matthew hammett knott indiewire
