there is no till death do us part vow between parents and children and yet parent child relationships are far more enduring than the marital relationships that made this phrase famous the life long parent child tie is so ubiquitous and taken for granted that it doesn't need an oath this unspoken pledge is our birthright in times of good and bad sickness and health parents and their children are bound for life but not every parent child tie is healthy and helpful and what's remarkable is this imperative persists even when these relationships are unsatisfactory or even deeply damaging why do we stay in these parent adult child relationships and how do we stay bonded amidst rejection and pain this book answers these questions drawing on interviews with 76 lgbtq adults and 44 of their parents the authors explain that conflictual rejecting and even abusive ties with parents endure because of what they call compulsory kinship the overarching socio cultural forces that tell us we have to stay in this bond no matter what that is what we think of as the natural and inevitable connection between parents and adult children is actually created and sustained by sociocultural forces of compulsory kinship with their empirical data the authors show why lgbtq people justify their adherence to the specific compulsory kinship using the rationales of love and closeness parental growth and the uniqueness of the parent child tie further they reveal how lgbtq people stay in difficult relationships with parents through a new type of family work called conflict work

a look at a prize winning documentarian whose work with aboriginal australians and others united the fields of film and anthropology in the 1960s and 70s in roger sandall's films and contemporary anthropology lorraine mortimer argues that while social anthropology and documentary film share historic roots and goals particularly on the continent of australia their trajectories have tended to remain separate this book reunites film and anthropology through the works of roger sandall a new zealand born filmmaker and columbia university graduate who was part of the vibrant avant garde and social documentary film culture in new york in the 1960s mentored by margaret mead in anthropology and cecile starr in fine arts sandall was eventually hired as the one man film unit at the newly formed Australian Institute of Aboriginal Studies in 1965 in the 1970s he became a lecturer in anthropology at the University of Sydney. Sandall won first prize for documentary at the Venice Film Festival in 1968 yet his films are scarcely known even in Australia now. Mortimer demonstrates how Sandall's films continue to be relevant to contemporary discussions in the fields of anthropology and documentary studies. She ties exploration of the making and restriction of Sandall's Aboriginal films and his nonrestricted films made in Mexico, Australia and India to the radical history of anthropology and the resurgence today of an expanded existential phenomenological anthropology that encompasses the vital connections between humans, animals, things and our environment.

The new sustainable development indicators don't do enough to hold the government to account for inequalities in the environment and in our communities as well as the economic inequalities that have long been obvious. The government should reconsider its proposal to drop the environmental equality sustainable development indicator and review each of the other proposed SDIs to see how they might capture the range of values for how they affect people's lives, not just the average. This report also criticises the lack of targets in the new indicator set despite there already being binding targets elsewhere in some areas covered by the SDIs for emissions, air pollution and renewable energy. The government should instead use an indicator which reflects the extent to which public sector debt will be a burden rather than a boon for the next generation, such as government bond rates. The natural resource use indicator is also of concern because it would monitor both finite and renewable resources taken together and potentially treat fossil fuels the same as other resources which need to be preserved for future generations to use. The revision of the SDIs is running in parallel with the measuring national well-being initiative set up by the Prime Minister in 2010 and being run by the Office for National Statistics. The committee identified some overlap between the two indicator frameworks which is likely to be unclear for the public and possibly also for policy makers. A single framework is recommended.

Labute takes us to shadowy places we don't like to talk about, sometimes even to think about. Newsday's obsession with surface and secrets runs through this second collection of Neil Labute's work. The Shape of Things peels back the skin of modern-day relationships to ask how far someone might change themselves for love or for art. In Fat Pig, a man confronts his friends and his own fixation with Hollywood ideals of beauty when he falls for a plus-size young woman in a dark, dark house. And in A Forest Dark and Deep, twin tales of sibling conflict: in the first, estranged brothers must reconcile conflicting memories after one asks for corroboration of childhood abuse; in the second, a man's offer to help his sister clear out her cottage brings a terrible confession into the light. The Shape of Things, what initially seems a touching study of student romance, develops instead into a passionate discussion about the way art feeds on life. Daily Telegraph Fat Pig as large as Helen. The tender heart of the play is easily twice as big. Variety in a dark, dark house, Labute toys with expectations and takes pleasure in our discomfort. The play does lead to a pretty dark place, but the ending is not without hope. Daily Mail. In A Forest Dark and Deep, it is billed as being about sibling rivalry, but in fact majors on far deeper, dangerous things: the yearning to be understood, female manipulation and fascinated male disgust.
